

How To Grow Your Own Vegetables in a Small Space

You don't have to have a large garden or allotment to grow your own, even a patio or balcony can produce quite a lot.

Tomatoes, sweet peppers, chillies and herbs can be grown in buckets. So can carrots, lettuce, dwarf beans and many other things. Florist buckets are very useful and can often be obtained from florists or green grocers for nothing. Tumbling tomatoes in these buckets can be attached to a fence taking up less room and making use of vertical space. Three or four of these can give you tomatoes all summer with no training or side shooting. You can also grow tumbling tomatoes, herbs or salad leaves in hanging baskets and window boxes.

Larger pots, woven plastic potato bags or even half a compost bag can grow potatoes or perhaps climbing beans or peas up a wigwam of canes.
